

Reminiscence

One method of coping with change is through reminiscence. There are several positive benefits of engaging in reminiscence. The present may be depressing or very unsatisfactory. By recalling a happier time, an older person may derive some contentment or the ability to endure the present. The strength to adjust to change may be derived from remembering previous successful adjustments.

Furthermore, reminiscence may provide an emotional outlet. Everyone reminisces. When something good happens, most people share the event with two or three friends. When friends meet they sometimes recall previous shared experiences and relive them at that moment. Some older people may not have several different people with whom to share an experience. If only one or two people are around that older person, those individuals may hear the same story several times.

Some of the common psychological purposes that reminiscence may serve are listed below.

IDENTITY

Through storytelling, an older person can reveal personal achievements and characteristics. Indirectly, the older person may be saying, "This is how I was before I became old." It serves as an introduction to that person prior to any limitations on energy or functioning. Personal characteristics are often revealed; a new acquaintance can begin to understand what the older person has been throughout his/her life by listening to reminiscences.

SELFASSASSESSMENT

In recalling the past, an older person may engage in self-assessment, deciding what kind of life one has lived. A review of the totality of one's life imparts a sense of integration of self. Allowing an older person to give advice, wisdom, or history to others through reminiscence can reinforce self-esteem. It may reinforce a person's feeling that his/her life has been worthwhile.

GRIEVING

Reminiscence can be a productive method of dealing with loss and grief. In verbally sharing the loss, an individual may come to accept it. In grief, there is a need to remember and to relive past experiences. Reminiscence provides that opportunity. There may be conflicts in the past that are unresolved or need to be re-evaluated. By remembering past events, a person may decide to make amends with someone; to be forgiving or to seek forgiveness. Losses, which were suppressed, may surface. Grieving may need to be completed.